Indeed, women are so restricted it has hard to know what dressing and acting like a man means in terms of gender identity. Women in the West have in the past dressed like men to be able to do things women's weren't allowed to do. Marriages are arranged so I think "doing without love" also means something different that kind of culture. Furthermore, wives lead very restrictive lives.

The author recounts how she spent her childhood in Afghanistan as a bacha posh, a girl dressed as a boy as part of a common practice that allowed her to act as a son, but then defied the custom of reverting to behaving as a woman in adolescence.
